WATER POLLUTION: A SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY OF CALIFORNIA AND U.S. GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

by

Sandra J. Lamprecht
Geography Librarian
California State University,
Long Beach

Water pollution like other kinds of pollution has become a much more complicated situation than it used to be. Planners, government officials, scientists and concerned citizens require current, accurate and authoritative data in order to assess and ameliorate conditions in their locale. Much literature in periodical and book form has been issued to meet this demand; however federal and state document sources are sometimes overlooked, due perhaps in part to their separate location in many depository libraries. This bibliography has been compiled with the express purpose of spotlighting some of these valuable government pamphlets and books.

Water Pollution has been arranged into three sections: Section I provides indexes in which periodical and newspaper articles as well as government documents can be found. Library of Congress call numbers have been provided in parenthesis for the user's convenience. Section II is a listing of U.S. government documents by issuing agency. The Superintendent of Document call number is supplied at the end of each citation; most of these documents are available in federal depository libraries (i.e. those libraries which receive documents on a regular basis from the U.S. Government). The California State documents, which compromise Section III, have the issuing agency supplied in parenthesis. Although usually available only in California depository libraries, I have included them in order to make the user aware of one state's publications in the water pollution sphere.

Publications on water pollution in general have been considered for inclusion whereas detailed analysis of specific types of pollution have not. As noted in the title, the bibliography is a "selected" list of documents: its purpose is to provide a selection of available documents rather than to exhaustively cite all documents issued. The time span is 1966 to the present.
